BIO

Alejandro Zuno is a filmmaker who graduated from the Escuela Nacional de Artes Cinematográficas of UNAM. His short film Oasis was awarded as the Best Fiction Short Film with the Ariel and Diosa de Plata awards in 2018. It also received the Panorama Latinoamericano Prize in the International Short Films Festival of Río de Janeiro, among other prizes. It was also selected for many national and international festivals.

In 2020 he was again nominated for the Ariel, this time in the category of Best Documentary Short Film for Abrir la Tierra, which won the award for Best Documentary at SHORTS MÉXICO 2020 and the Literally Short Film Festival, in addition to other awards and nominations.

He directed the second unit of the movie Cosas Imposibles and the series Asesino del olvido that can be watched on HBO Max.

Zuno is currently post-producing the series Tengo que morir todas las noches for Paramount+, of which he is directing four chapters. At the same time, he is working on the development of his first feature film, El mundo en el que nací.
